Q: How to detect the version of installed Wordpress plugin? Is it possible to get the version of a installed plugin in a Wordpress page, and how? Thank you very much. A: In your plugin there's a files called data.php. Open it up in a text editor like Notepad++ and you'll see what you want. It'll be in this format: $plugin_info = get_plugin_data($plugin_file); if ($plugin_info &&! empty($plugin_info['Version'])) printf('%s v%s - %s', $plugin_info['Name'], $plugin_info['Version'], $plugin_info['Version']); else printf('%s v%s', $plugin_info['Name'], $plugin_info['Version']); A: If you visit Plugins → Add New, and click on [Up To Date] beside your plugin in the search box, it'll tell you the version in use. Alternatively, you can use the wp_plugin_update_last_changed() function to fetch the last change date/time. A: Okay, first you will have to parse the data.php of the plugin you're interested in. You can do that with the following function: function get_plugin_info($file) { // read the data.php file of the plugin $handle = fopen($file, 'r'); if ($handle) { // read the first line of the file $contents = fgets($handle); // construct a name for the plugin based on the file name $name = str_replace("wp-content", "", $file); // parse the file looking for the "Name:" line $data = explode('Name:', $contents); // trim the split array $name = trim($

Q: Any good advices about how to manage websites built with versions like 1.1, 1.2, 2.0 etc? I'm in the process of creating a new website at work and I am using a CMS to create the content. I want to use a versioning system similar to Ruby on Rails versioning. I have tried to search the internet and I found an article about this topic: The article suggest to manage the versioning at the environment level, not the application level. So I think I have the right to use the versioning in multiple environments (dev, test, production), but maybe I am missing something. Can I use versioning for multiple environments and how should I do it? A: Rails was built for this purpose, so if you are thinking of using a different framework, it is the wrong way to go about it. In my experience, you should be having a separate subdomain that is relevant to a particular environment. Then for each environment, you should have a repository of the site's code. This might be something you write yourself or something built by a code host like Heroku. For this purpose, you can use the Heroku Cedar stack for free and have your environment live there. You probably also want to look at elastic.co to help you manage your code repositories, there are a number of other options out there. For a static page oriented site, the.gitignore might do the trick. Q: What is the proper way to swap keys in a dictionary? I use the following code for swapping keys in a dictionary: public static void SwapDictKeys (Dictionary d) { for (int i = 0; i temp = new Dictionary (d); temp [i] = d [i]; d [i] = temp [i]; temp.RemoveAt (i);
