The suicide bomber who killed at least 15 people at a Polish military airbase north of the capital, Warsaw, on Tuesday (17 April) was not necessarily the target of the attack, the police say. The suspect, identified by Polish media as 27-year-old Polish national Matej G., carried a backpack filled with explosives when he boarded a bus in the capital at 10:25am and blew himself up, police told AFP. Matej G. was known to the security services for jihadist links, officials say. He was convicted in 2016 of preparing terrorist attacks and given a 10-year sentence. Poland is on high alert after two church attacks in the past year claimed by jihadist groups left more than 100 people dead, including 40 in the deadliest in Europe since the 2012 Munich shootings by Islamist gunmen. "We're not going to speculate" on why he chose to strike at the military base, Interior Minister Joachim Brudziński told Polish news agency PAP, adding that an investigation was underway. "There's no evidence that people were targeted in the attack," Brigadier General Leszek Słodkowski, commander of the Air Force Base in central Poland, said. "The blast was powerful, but it was not directed at military personnel." The bomber was shot by police when the bus came to a stop. None of the 25 people injured sustained life-threatening injuries. Police said they are treating the attack as a terrorist act, with Interior Minister Joachim Brudziński saying that he believed the bomber was a "lone wolf" Speaking at a press conference early Wednesday, the police commissioner of Warsaw said that the incident is "extremely serious and we hope to be able to clarify the reason for the attack." "There are no other suspects in custody at this stage," he said. "The investigation is ongoing." The police on Wednesday confirmed the bomber's identity and that the bus he had boarded in Warsaw was a company vehicle. Brudziński told reporters that the suspect was born in Poland in 1998. Warsaw residents An employee of the state-owned energy company PGNiG, Matej G.'s father went to France with his colleagues, the police have said. All of the people killed were on their way home, Brudziński said, adding that there were mainly civilians in the bus.
