Please refer to our Privacy Policy or Contact Us for more details even if she had been successful in qualifying for disability retirement, the record suggests that the decision to terminate plaintiff's employment was motivated at least in part by the non-retirement-related factors that we have already discussed. As to the alleged disability-related factor, plaintiff contends that the decision to fire her was made because she was required to complete a “medical, one-on-one, investigation.” Plaintiff did not attempt to make this point in the district court, and it is not apparent from our review of the record that plaintiff made the argument in the administrative proceedings before the Board. We decline to consider plaintiff’s argument for the first time on appeal. Finally, even if we were to assume that plaintiff established a prima facie case, defendant has shown by a preponderance of the evidence that its decision to terminate plaintiff’s employment was not motivated by her medical condition. As noted, the evidence of record indicates that defendant had ample reason to fire plaintiff. The record supports a finding that plaintiff’s performance during the semester at issue was poor. The evidence demonstrates that she failed to complete a substantial portion of her degree requirements. Although she was scheduled for one class per week, she only attended two of the eighteen classes she had available. The record indicates that plaintiff made no effort to set up an acceptable work schedule or to obtain a reasonable accommodation. Because of her tardiness and her poor performance in class, plaintiff received an “F” in the class. The record suggests that some
