Xperia X Compact, X Compact Review After the disastrous Sony Ericsson Xperia X, the excellent Sony Ericsson

Xperia X is back. A head-turner at the time of release, it was quickly overshadowed by the Xperia T and a couple of other A-class smartphones in the Xperia line-up. It's long been an old fussy device. Sony Ericsson Xperia X Compact review A svelte look The Xperia X Compact is a much bigger and better-looking device than you'd think - in fact, it's almost indistinguishable from the X, save for the fact that it's nowhere near as huge and bulky. It actually looks quite stylish. The screen, meanwhile, is a bigger version of that of the original X, which is 4.3in and pretty darn good. This one is bigger still, but isn't bigger than the original, so it doesn't feel like a step down in size. It's also had the key design changes - ridged sides - ditched in favour of a smooth one, which should make it more comfortable to hold and easier to use with one hand, not to mention more discreet.

The surface is also, unlike that of the original, ridged rather than smooth, which also makes it more comfortable to hold. Not quite stunning However, the X Compact has some big drawbacks. The screen is noticeably dimmer than that of the original phone, which you'll definitely notice. In fact, it's only much better than previous X's if you crank it up to full brightness, which can be painful at times. The camera, meanwhile, is now a 5-megapixel affair, but has only a VGA one on the front, which should be good enough for most and deadlines - Resource usage tracking - Self-service for reservations - Auto-replacing objects - Fast and personalized control over the system - And a lot more...

ActiTIME is a web-based software which replaces the need of many existing tools that are often struggling and convoluted to be used properly. In no time, this application is so simple to use that even a novice user will be able to adjust to this system in a matter of minutes. The major benefit of this web-based project-tracking tool is that you can use the same software whether it is installed on your personal computer, laptop, or any other device connected with the Internet. Think of actiTIME as having a huge database in which all of your projects are stored and where you have access to your time-tracking data without the hassle of searching through several different folders, saving time and money. Benefits: - create a new database Once the installer is over, you can log into actiTIME via a web browser using the default user name and password displayed here. It is highly recommended to change these credentials immediately afterward for security purposes. After this step, you can directly launch the app with an empty database or review two demos. So, you can configure general settings, create billing types and tasks to report time for, as well as put together accounts for other users. The web interface is clean and intuitive, having all these aforementioned modules neatly organized in separate areas. Configure general options, billing and leave types, logo and color scheme General settings revolve around time-track hierarchy levels, time report, time-track of other users, leave time, control of overtime and undertime, time estimates, user groups, reporting, formats (calendar and time, time zone, numbers, currency), email (mail server, message parameters, error processing), along with notifications. Billing types can be studied when it comes to their status and rate. Moreover, you can set any of them as default, change their order in the list, and delete any entries. The same rules apply to the leave types too (sick leave, time off, vacation). Plus, the logo and color scheme may be customized. Create new users and manage departments

The first step you have to take is building a list with users, in order to assign them to projects and assign the projects to clients. New users can be created with a user name, password, access type (enabled or disabled), contact information, department, time zone, workday duration, overtime tracking mode (enabled or disabled), hourly rates, and access rights (time-track submission, reporting, task hierarchy management, system
