Land degradation (LD) assessment considers the effect of land degradation on natural and/or social systems. The LD assessment methods used in previous meta-analyses are limited in their ability to reflect real-world implementations. This study aimed at critically appraising the accuracy of static and dynamic methods in LD assessment. We conducted a systematic search in five electronic databases and reference lists of relevant studies published up to August 2015. We included quantitative studies that evaluated accuracy of methods against visual rating, or ground truthing, and experimental studies that tested accuracy of methods. We assessed identified studies for risk of bias and used a random effects model to calculate the pooled accuracy rates of methods. We extracted data from 76 studies with 2503 assessments of land degradation in real world and two experiments. The pooled accuracy rates of methods for assessing land degradation were 75% (95% confidence interval (CI): 68-81%) and 82% (95% CI: 74-88%) when assessed using ground truthing and visual rating, respectively. The pooled sensitivity, specificity, positive likelihood ratio, and negative likelihood ratio of methods were 0.91 (95% CI: 0.86-0.94), 0.51 (95% CI: 0.47-0.55), 2.2 (95% CI: 1.9-2.7), and 0.31 (95% CI: 0.27-0.35), respectively. Overall, an assessment of land degradation was accurate in only 75% of ground truthing and 82% of visual rating assessments. These results suggest that assessments of land degradation should consider the context of implementation and use a combination of methods to improve accuracy of assessments.Q: How to sort a python list of dictionaries based on a common dictionary key?
