The use of computers and computer networks has become widespread in recent years. Consumers have become accustomed to accessing information using computer networks, such as the Internet. The Internet is a computer network that includes many servers and clients. The servers provide information on various topics and the clients request the information from the servers. The clients, in turn, may access information from the servers, retrieve information from other servers, or utilize a number of other functions available on the Internet. To access information on the Internet, the client must first obtain the information from the server using a communications network. To obtain the information, the client typically accesses a web site on the Internet. The client may navigate through numerous web pages on the web site and may eventually be asked by the web site to fill out a form. The form usually requires information from the client, such as name and address. The information is then stored on the server. When the client has filled out the form, the client may then navigate to another web page, fill in another form, and submit the form. The form may be on a web site operated by the same entity as the web site that has the original form. Information is typically obtained from the server on a first web page and is then sent back to the client in the form of a web page. In other words, the information is sent from the server to the client in response to a client request. However, in some cases, the client may request that a file be transferred to the client. For example, the client may request that a file be downloaded from the server to the client. When the client requests a file to be transferred to the client, the file must be sent from the server to the client in a communication network. However, it is typically difficult for the client to locate the file on the server using the communication network. Additionally, it is also typically difficult for the client to open the file and determine what information is contained in the file. Typically, the client must contact the server to obtain the name of the file. In many cases, the server will have limited information regarding the file.
