3D modelers such as 3D Studio, Autodesk 3D Warehouse, and Autodesk Meshmixer also use CAD data structures. In the 2000s, Autodesk published 3D Studio as a free software development kit, providing tools for the creation of 3D models from CAD drawings. More recently, Autodesk's portfolio of software has shifted more towards services than on the consumption side. Extensibility of the software The architectural nature of the software makes it possible for developers to extend the functionalities of the software by writing plugins, or so-called "extensions". Autodesk provides an Extensibility SDK to help in writing code. Extensions allow AutoCAD Product Key users to customize the product with extensions. Some of these are developed by Autodesk itself, such as a user interface for batch processing, but many are third party. An example is named "3D Categories" which adds interactive 3D navigation to the AutoCAD landscape, allowing users to explore 3D models in a familiar way. Extensions can be categorized into four groups: 3D extensions, new toolbars and toolbars, new commands and tools. 3D extensions usually extend the functionality of the product, new tools and toolbar such as 3D viewer can be found in the R2014 release. Licensing For the last several years, Autodesk has offered its AutoCAD software at two license levels: Autodesk Authorized reseller sales of the product are called Authorized Users (AU). These are salespeople who are entitled to resell AutoCAD, and their resellers are allowed to resell this version of AutoCAD. Distributors selling the software to end users, often in a volume-driven way. Autodesk Authorized Reseller Autodesk Authorized Resellers (AAR) are Autodesk Authorized Users (AU) who are able to offer their own products and services to the end user. Resellers are able to create their own products and services using the same tools, at the same time as the AU. In some cases, they are able to provide value added services to their clients. Authorized Reseller Price: It is similar to the commercial version except that for Authorized Resellers, pricing is based on the number of licenses they purchase and can range from to per license.
