Arcade's New Licensing Model and What's Next for the Xbox's Console & PC Games Strategies - GameSpot(
Schappert, Lead Director of Marketing for Xbox Live Arcade stated in an IGN interview that Microsoft is doing away with traditional contract agreements with developers, instead signing a group license with all the major industry players. We also know that Microsoft asked for exclusivity for some of their titles on the

So, it seems a bad time to pick an argument with him! As for sales for Xbox LIVE Arcade, John states that Microsoft is selling XBLA games better than other platforms because of the savings the company is able to achieve from publishing for other platforms. In an Xbox LIVE Arcade games that are sold on the service, developers don't go through the process of contact agreements and instead are able to pick and choose which publishers they wish to work with. We know that Microsoft is planning to launch their own downloadable game service for the Xbox 360 later this year. While there are currently games published that will be submitted to Microsoft's service, it will be a direct competitor to the Xbox LIVE Arcade games service.
