Interactive passes move the ball towards a player, which can be boosted for added power. A new next-gen animation system allows players to be more animated and showcase agility and a wider array of movement skills. The new revolutionary physics engine also contains some of FIFA 21's most requested gameplay improvements. The new engine doesn't replace FIFA 21's laser precision ball physics, but it is designed to replicate the power and speed that players expect. Whether you are splitting a goal, coping with years of hard work in the academy, or taking your goal-scoring star to the next level, there will be plenty for fans to enjoy, while they'll be able to explore these new characters on a personal scale. Total Game Control The Total Game Control or TGC as it is commonly known, is one of the core gameplay elements in FIFA which has already been touted as the most significant feature of FIFA 22.

TGC or Total Game Control is essentially the simulation of a player's ability to control the ball through the entire match. It is designed to replicate the physical and mental skills of a skilled footballer, as well as to give a true sense of player positioning on the pitch. It has been explained that Total Game Control, or TGC, puts the player in the most relevant, correct position on the pitch - keeping everything in context, without any unnecessary animations. Q: Keep port open after a release build, but throw it away if there is a debug build

If I'm running a debug build on my system, a port is opened to allow me to connect to the program, but if I'm running a release build, the port is never opened (as I want). How can I find out which build the application is running, and then open the port only if the application is running a release build?

A: Since you are running the application in the context of Visual Studio, you can read the MSBuild properties to determine which file is being used. You can find out the build configuration of the current build based on the `$(ConfigurationName)` property, e.g. `$(ConfigurationName)` to check the build configuration is Debug, `$(ConfigurationName)` to check it is Release, `$(ConfigurationName) bc9d6d6daa`
