Bodbeheer director drags MeTRON to court for refusing to treat bison Times View The MeTRON is the most advanced robotic livestock handling system to date, but it has caused friction among graziers. The Retron robot, developed by Bodbeheer, can transport bison and sheep via a ‘stampede path’. Its creators, Randy Paymaster, the owner of the company, and Larry Linden, oncologist at St Joseph’s Medical Center in Phoenix, Arizona, believe it will improve blood testing and enhance bison management, though the National Bison Association sees its efforts as a threat. In a ground-breaking test on a farm in Kewanee, Illinois, a herd of buffalo were fed with a prototype of the robot that could automatically place bison on a ‘stampede path’. The robot – a trailer with four pneumatic robotic legs that drive it forward in perfect step – was invented to automatically drive herds of cattle, sheep and goats. “MeTRON is the most advanced robotic livestock handling system to date, but it has caused friction among graziers,” says Wolfgang Maier, marketing manager at MeTRON GmbH. “This friction has made MeTRON develop unique solutions and go beyond the typical criteria of traditional robotics.” The four
