It is served by the Portbury Team Ministry (formerly St John the Evangelist Team Ministry), a division of the Diocese of Exeter. The church was built, around 1350, and an existing church, dedicated to St Nicholas, may have preceded it. It is a Grade II* listed building, as is a piscina (a Christian baptismal font), and a carved corbel. The church is in Early English style. History The first church was a joint parish with St Nicholas; it was of the nave and chancel type. A second church was constructed about 1350, of roughly rectangular plan, with aisles and an east tower. The chancel and north and south aisles were now entirely separate, as the church may have been divided in two by a wall. The chancel arch might have been the same that was reused in the third church, where it spans the east end of the north aisle. The bellcote was later rebuilt. There are two windows in the chancel, aisles and clerestory, and a third in the east wall. Between the aisles a door, with pointed arch, is on the north side, and on the south side is a doorway with a pointed arch. In the north wall there are two large windows in the clerestory and six in the nave, and in the south wall there are five large windows. The roof is covered with lead. In the sixteenth century the chancel was increased in length, though the width of the nave remains the same, as is that of the aisle. The roof was reconstructed again in the eighteenth century, the building-inspector for which was paid £55, and the repairs cost £252. Parish The parish, which contains the settlements of East and West Ottery, is served by the Portbury Team Ministry (formerly St John the Evangelist Team Ministry), a division of the
