We present a case of recurrent aneurysmal bone cyst of a knee, 5 years after the treatment, including marginal excision, Osteoset and intralesional steroid injection. On the left knee: periosteal dissection of the patellar tendon was performed and the pathological section was removed. Pathological examination revealed features suggestive of an aneurysmal bone cyst. No recurrence was found during 4-year follow-up. The differential diagnosis between recurrent aneurysmal bone cyst and joint-space osteosarcoma is difficult, and may lead to the wrong therapeutic approach.DIY's Be Better Today Challenge: Pump Up Your Brake Lights This week's challenge is all about safety. Give the brake lights on your car a quickie makeover and see if you can make it better. Ready to give it a go? It's as easy as 1, 2, 3 ... (no, really!) 1. Choose your lights Before you start, look for lights that are easy to reach, such as the brake lights. It's nice if you can customize your system with extra reflectors for night and foggy conditions. Using a wire straightener or other tape measure, measure the distance from the back of the car to the brake light. This is the diameter you'll need for your new bulb. 2. Cut and strip your wire Choose a pair of wire cutters that can cut through a small piece of wire, like the kind used for brake lines. You will need a sufficient length of wire to cover the entire length of your old light unit. You might need to choose a wire that is at least 12 inches. To cut the wire, look for the locations of the positive and negative electrical connections on your old light unit. Make sure you know where these are before you begin. Most often, the positive connection is on the bottom side of the light unit and the negative connection is on the top. Remove the light unit from your car's fender. Also, remove any Phillips screws or other mounting screws
