The aim of this paper is to assess the extent of the problem of youth violence in Rio de Janeiro City, Brazil. The study is based on data from a survey conducted in five favelas of Rio de Janeiro's Central Zone. The violence was investigated using the Conflict Tactics Scale, a questionnaire with three instruments: Juvenile Conflict Questionnaire, Violent Events Questionnaire and the Conflict Experience Scale. At the time of the survey, 25% of the men and 19% of the women surveyed had at least one violent event. Among the men, 59% of those aged 16 to 19 years, 41% of those aged 20 to 24 and 47% of those aged 25 to 29, had experienced at least one event during the previous year. Among the women, 54% of those aged 16 to 19 and 42% of those aged 20 to 24 had experienced violence. The most common violent experience was physical attack (32% of the men and 59% of the women). The type of aggression was more often of an aggressive and violent nature in the men, while in the women it was more often of a passive and negligent nature. The most common location of the violent event was outside the home. Perpetrators were mainly members of their families, with a predominance of women as perpetrators, and in those cases the violence was more often of an aggressive and violent nature. The presence of an intimate partner was a significant factor in women's violent experiences. Among the women, 55% of those with a violent experience reported that the experience had negatively influenced their lives. The most significant predictor of violence in young people in this study was the presence of a partner.
