I'm asking because my question "Is it ever okay to pray to the Trinity" has been closed. I suspect it was because it started out like a kind of history question but it was edited into a question about the cross (and I think questions about the cross have a certain kind of "too localized" feel) which would seem to make it off-topic. I'll take that as a volunteer explanation of the problem, not criticism, for now. A: I don't have a problem with these questions when they're asked in a historically-informed way. I think the problem is that it's being asked in a way that makes it obvious that it's not really about the history of the reformations. If it were, we'd have called it the "Protestant Reformation" - as a tag. And we'd have asked it on the Protestant History site, not here. So it comes off looking like a historically-uninformed question that's being asked on a site about Christianity (and, not least, on an SE site). I'd welcome an SE historian to come and argue that, in fact, the Protestant Reformation started as soon as Martin Luther broke with the Catholic Church over the sale of indulgences - which was the only way he could think of to get around the prohibition of selling to the Jews. I think that's where history begins in the split with the Catholics - and history ends when Martin Luther was hanged for treason. And, if someone asks a question like that on the site they should be able to expect a right answer - not one that was written by an expert in an academic debate of history. Such questions need to be asked in a way that's not going to get into historical debate.
