Evaluation of the correlation between the bacterial count and the physicochemical parameters in osseointegrated implants. Many studies have shown that bacteriology of periimplantitis is as important as that in periodontal disease, but there are few studies on the correlation between the physicochemical parameters and the periimplant bacteria. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the correlation between the physicochemical parameters of the periimplant tissue and the bacterial count in periimplantitis. The periimplant soft and hard tissues of 21 conventional implants and 17 osseointegrated implants, which had been used as a single or as a double implant, were evaluated by bacterial culture, scanning electron microscopy, and energy dispersive x-ray analysis. The highest bacterial count and the deepest probing depth were found at the implant abutment interface in both types of implants. There was a significant correlation between the degree of inflammation and the bacterial count in periimplantitis, but there was no correlation between the macroscopic and x-ray images and the bacterial count.

Differential expression of microRNA-7a-5p in colon adenocarcinoma cells under chemotherapeutic stress. Colon cancer is one of the leading causes of cancer death. miRNAs are important post-transcriptional regulators of oncogenic and tumor-suppressive genes. Aberrant expression of miRNAs has been found in a variety of cancers. The association of miRNA-7a-5p and chemotherapeutic stress in colorectal cancer has not been studied. In the current study, we examined the relative expression of miR-7a-5p in colon cancer cell lines following exposure to a chemotherapeutic agent, 5-fluorouracil. Our data show that miR-7a-5p was downregulated in colon cancer cells, and its overexpression reduced cell proliferation, induced cell apoptosis and sensitized cancer cells to 5-fluorouracil treatment. Furthermore, we identified a potential miR-7a-5p binding site in the 3'-untranslated region of apoptosis-related genes, including SMAD7. Importantly, overexpression of miR-7a-5p partially rescued SMAD7 in colon cancer cells, and cotreatment of colon cancer cells with miR-7a-5p and 5-fluorouracil resulted in an additive effect. miR-7a-5p overexpression effectively inhibited tumor growth in colon cancer xenografts in vivo. Our data demonstrate that miR-7a-5p is downregulated in colon cancer and could be a candidate tumor suppressor in colon cancer. lead to the breakdown of the assumptions needed for solution of the electronic structure of the EEC complex. The answer lies in the complexity of the EEC models in what concerns the treatment of the non-Coulomb exchange-correlation in the L2T2 and GRECP approximations. In this case, the exchange-correlation effects can be given by an effective exchange-correlation potential, and the exchange hole is directly handled in the EEC self-energy, with only two parameters for each approximation. Finally, an effective exchange-correlation treatment together with the LDA+$U$ method may provide a correct description of the ground
