===== The ability of the neurological care team to recognize the very early signs of neuropsychiatric deficits following brain injury is of utmost importance for early intervention and to prevent and postpone the acute and disabling deficits. The early detection of subtle neurological deficits allows the implementation of effective prevention and rehabilitation strategies that are specifically tailored to the individual.

Aim
 == In this study, our aim is to investigate and to develop the comprehensive rehabilitation plan for the patient with mild traumatic brain injury (mTBI).

Methods ===== Design: Prospective cohort study of mTBI patients. Setting: Clinical Rehabilitation Unit. Participants: 31 patients with mTBI. The subjects were recruited from 2014 - 2016.

Measurements ===== The outcome measures used in this study are identified through a literature search. The demographic data, Glasgow Coma Scale (GCS), depressed mood (DM) and cognitive assessment of the subjects are collected from a questionnaire and interview data.

Discussion =====
