Tomsk-7 is the last city standing on a planet covered by a deadly “bacteria biome,” an ecosystem created by the spreading life-sucking pathogens all the way from the ancient Soviet-era Tomsk-7 biological weapons facility. Now hordes of the grotesque monstrosities are pouring out from the facility, hellbent on destroying everything that lives. Fortunately, you have been sent to the crumbling outskirts of the Tomsk-7 “city” to help fend off the attack. However, just outside the gates is a vast wasteland, ripe for the picking. You must strategically call in air drops of secondary weapons consisting of Molotov cocktails, land mines, Tomahawks, and anti-bug smoke bombs in order to ensure your long term survival. Key Features:

- 6 different weapons, each with unique attributes
- The option to manually call in air drops (tanks, grenades, and missiles) using V.A.T.S.
- Tons of unlocked weapons (tanks, grenades, and missiles)
- Tons of unique bonuses (e.g. bonus munitions, firepower, stealth, etc.)
- The unique ability to use Tommys
- Steam achievements and leaderboards
- High replayability
- An epic soundtrack

Disclaimer • “Winning” in Listeria Wars is not a true achievement or game save. Ask HN: How to document a Perl library? - mezime I'm starting to write a Web service framework library in Perl, and I'm looking for good docs. I'm really bad with writing docs, so any pointers would be much appreciated! I'm thinking of some pages with a high level overview of what the library does, some code examples and maybe how to use it: ===== makecheck Don't underestimate how much content to include. In particular, code examples often don't take up much room and are easy to add. And don't underestimate the value of the "what the project is about" page; it can be the first thing that a beginner will see and can give an idea of how much effort is involved. We tend to take for granted that cars come with airbags and seatbelts, that road signs are clearly marked and that fire alarms and smoke detectors are readily accessible. But many of these basic safety devices aren't present in cars across America, according to a government watchdog report. The report, by the Government Accountability Office, or GAO, said that many of the federally required safety devices are not installed and/or accessible in cars. For example, a car without these systems often has no airbag, while a car with some systems has a single airbag that might not deploy in the event of a crash. The report also said that many cars lack occupant sensing devices, which are intended to open a car door if the car is rear-ended. Some cars have a rear door, but few have a sensor to indicate when the door is opened. The report said that the National Highway Traffic Safety

: D.C.'s Incredible Urban Revitalization Mary Grace Donatone for The New York Times By MARY GRACE DONATONE Published: September 24, 2013 D.C. development has a long history of grand plans. But for real change to take place, you need not only money, but a certain sense of morality -- and a lot of patience. The recent opening of Pennsylvania Avenue retail space by the firm DC by Design marked a turn toward a more pedestrian friendly downtown environment for the government and retail landscape. The eye of a neighboring developer could not help but be drawn to the neon lights of storefronts and a new bustling market on the streets. Perhaps there is a way to work with private builders while still preserving important open spaces. Less than a mile from the Capitol, down the block from the United States Air Force Academy, DC by Design is poised to change the D.C. landscape and open your eyes to what development has become today. The firm, which has offices in New York, Manhattan and Washington, specializes in urban design and is looking to give D.C. something the city desperately needs: retail real estate and in-tact open-space spaces. One of the firm's projects, Pennsylvania Plaza, is D.C.'s only freestanding large-format retail development and is located one block over from USPCC (the Federal Center at the U.S. Capitol). The Pennsylvania Plaza project is being done by EYA and other firms that tend to work in large and open spaces, creating well-designed and lively spaces in urban areas. The project's success is clear; most of the retail space is entirely leased, and the restaurants, shops and multiplex are earning high praise. An eclectic mix of the District's young and old, office workers and flight attendants, retail workers and elected officials populate the space. The question is, can the space be widely replicated and adhere to the not-for-profit model that makes the District unique? Can the retail/residential mix build vertically or horizontally to include mixed-use buildings, small and large? Can it also be insulated from noise, distraction and pollution? Only with good programs and a true sense of civic duty can such a project be successful. The Washington Post reports that the firm's president of Washington, Warren P. Katz, told the Post that the project is one of DC by Design's biggest projects

On the Eastern edge of Exoria lies the Bear Falls forest. Although it is quite small compared to the surrounding areas, it's one of the most unique and overgrown forests. It's also very dangerous, as one of the Grizzly Bear's most infamous ways of attack is to jump on their prey, which it accomplishes by climbing down the trees. Battling Bears Bear Falls lies in the northwestern corner of the map, there, is a huge briar patch, which is full of brambles that stun players upon contact. When the Grizzly Bear stops, it will stand in one place and suddenly move towards its prey. It does not damage if it catches up. The best way to avoid being attacked by a Grizzly Bear is to be quick and outrun it! Dangerous Areas of the Map Bear Falls itself has small ravines and paths that the bear uses to sneak around. Also, there is a town in the middle of the forest, but you will not be able to enter unless you have a key. Bear Falls: NEW HUNT: YOUR SHEPHERD HAS BEEN ATTACKED! PUT YOURSELF TO SPEED UP AND ESCAPE!
