It is characterized by the use of a type of tea called huajiao (), a cultivar of Dianhong (see Haw; also known as Da Hong Pao). Dianhong and Nanshe are also called "forest gardens" (; Xin Miao) in Lijiang. The word nanshe has traditionally been used exclusively for this style of tea, in particular for tea from Lijiang, but in recent years, it is increasingly used for tea from elsewhere in China. Nanshe is also an important export industry and some factories export as far
