It was originally developed for web designers but has evolved to provide a more generic web page creation and editing system. Dreamweaver uses a tag-based, hierarchical web structure that is an excellent way to keep design-related document management and collaboration streamlined. Dreamweaver has a designer-friendly layout that comes with a lot of options for helping you achieve the results you need with simple drag-and-drop operations. At the same time, Dreamweaver utilizes a vector-based, layout system to produce web graphics that are responsive to any screen size. It uses a tag-based structure that supports both HTML5 and CSS3. However, it's predominantly HTML5, which means that you have a more visual way to create websites. Dreamweaver also supports Flash, which makes the program more than a simple website creation program. The program allows you to access a database of tools, and it also provides basic integration with Microsoft Office, which allows you to import and edit PDF documents, Microsoft Visio, and even a number of other document types. Dreamweaver has features that appeal to the novice as well as the professional. It is easy to use, has many helpful tools, and it provides a tremendous amount of support for dealing with non-HTML documents. It's definitely worth checking out if you want to get into web design. Cura is Adobe's new web design software that has swept through the web design community. Cura is what is known as a parametric 3D web designer. It was designed for designers who need an intuitive and powerful solution to create print and web layouts. It's not just for web designers, however. Cura enables anyone to create print and web graphics with stunning accuracy. Cura works best with 3D models. Cura uses a parametric modeling system that works with layers that are editable as well as non-editable. This is different from other programs that use selectable objects that can be individually removed and then redrawn. It has many of the features found in other

Q: How to replace value in JavaScript map I have an array of objects with a structure like this: let data = [{ values: { "name": "Name", "city": "City" } } { values: { "name": "Name2", "city": "City2" } }] Each value is a name, like Name or Name2, and a city, like City or City2. I need to replace the city value with Country if its something from the country list (data list). If not, just leave the value. The idea is to get a nice data structure. Here is what I've tried: let newArray = data.map(function(obj) { return { values: { "name": obj.values.name, "country": country } } }) The result should be: let newArray = [{ values: { "name": "Name",

Tracking the market and economic trends that shape your finances. Starbucks is raising its prices, and today customers can find a $5 daily deal near the Mar Vista store July 19, 2008 | 12:01 am Starbucks is raising its prices, and today customers can find a $5 daily deal near the Mar Vista store (465 Pacific Coast Highway, Encinitas). Starbucks is boosting prices by 5%, on average, beginning Thursday. Breakfast will rise by $1 to $7.75, and lunch and dinner will increase by 3% to $8.25. The 12-ounce tall iced mocha will go up $1 to $2.75 and the bagged iced coffee will increase to $2. A latte, on the other hand, will stay the same, at $4. The company has been trying to stimulate sales, saying it has lost 3% of its business to super-price-sensitive competitors, including Dunkin' Donuts. "It's not going to generate much of an increase, but it's a step toward recovery," said Joe McCarten, director of Starbucks' partnership and licensing division. The new prices are the first changes in 14 months. McCarten said the company has since raised prices in the Northeast and South but not in the West. Starbucks is expected to report a fourth-quarter net loss of $19 million to $20 million on revenues in the range of $4.25 billion to $4.35 billion. The company said late last week that it has seen an uptick in business and that its holiday sales will be well below 2008's record $5.9 billion.As we embark on the first year of our clinic, we are excited about the support we have received from the human and animal health professions at the University of Florida and the education program it has offered us in new ways.
