How to link a relative path in eclipse?
When I use a relative path in an eclipse project, there's no link to the directory where the project resides. This means when I click on a file that resides in a directory that's several levels deep, it's as if I'm opening an editor in the same directory. Is there any way to do this? A: Problems aren't solved by clicking. You have to tell Eclipse where is the folder.
You don't say what version of Eclipse you are using. When you go to "Team" in Eclipse and select "Show in Explorer", then you can find your folder there. In the Project Explorer, click on the folder/project you want to link, and then right click and choose "Marked with Selected Folder". EDIT: I was trying to describe how to link a project folder to Eclipse. In my situation, I needed to link the folder I was developing the project in, to a second Eclipse project. I first tried "Mark with Selected Folder", since I had already selected the folder I wanted to link, but that didn't work. So I tried "Mark with Project", and it worked perfectly. A:

Make sure the Java Build Path is set correctly for a given project. Go to the Java Build Path icon (top-right). Select the projects on the left. Select the project you're working with in the center. Make sure that the project's root directory is selected. Select the proper components on the right, using the + button. For instance, for a project with "project" as root directory, I would set build path as follows. Go to the Java Build Path icon (top-right). Select the projects on the left.

Select the project you're working with in the center. Make sure that the project's root directory is selected. Select project's bin directory. Right click and choose Add Library. Select Archive Base and choose your root directory, then OK
