How does the "disabled" HTML attribute affect the appearance of the browser's tab icon? How does the "disabled" HTML attribute affect the appearance of the browser's tab icon? Is there a CSS3-trick for that? A: You can easily style the tab "banner". There is however no CSS3-trick, as it is still hardcoded in browsers. So for example, IE will use a different method than Firefox to display a disabled tab. To make sure the "disabled" HTML attribute really disables the tab, you may also want to add a label, as you might want to know which tab is disabled for your accessibility tools or whatever. Q: how to select rows from table where 03:00 | 1 2012-12-02 03:00 | 2 I need to select the select * from ( select * from table where key_column=1 ) as q where q.date

A: You can use: `SELECT * FROM second_table WHERE key_column IN (1, 2) GROUP BY key_column HAVING COUNT(*)>1` The brain mechanisms underlying poor automaticity in Parkinson's disease (PD) are poorly understood, but clinical experience suggests that these mechanisms are closely related to the phenomenon of motor impersistence.
