The term "registry" (or registry) is used to describe part of Microsoft Windows, that contains configuration and setup information of a computer. It runs in the memory and contains all the installation settings of each and every application on the system. Once installation of a software starts, all the data and information about the software gets copied from the "dictionary.wxs" file from the "installer" directory (known to be the setup program directory) to the "registry.wxs" file of the "installer" directory of the directory. File header A file header contains the information about a file. File headers are typically assigned record identifiers and a file type identifier. The header is followed by a set of optional fixed data fields and a variable-length trailer. The data fields make up the data body of a file, and the trailer is the unstructured footer that immediately follows the data body. The header is followed by the data body. In this case, the installed software is in $draganddrop\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Installer\ProgramFiles 15. Some of the Windows Registry keys that your computer needs to function correctly may be reset during a system update, cleaning or other actions. Registry keys are the source of important information on your system, and they have to be updated to fix various problems. There are a few possible reasons for registry errors and other problems and they include: * Deleting files or folders from the root of the system * Deleting incorrect registry keys * Deleting registry keys that contain important data * Deleting extra empty registry keys * Deleting the wrong registry key The drivers download keys does not work to disable network devices in your system, you have to manually disable network adapter.So, open your Registry editor and delete network adapter key from the hard disk.
