A. Field of Invention The invention relates to the use of biomolecules as the binding agents for nucleic acids, particularly oligonucleotides. More particularly, the invention relates to the use of biomolecules obtained from plants as the binding agent for nucleic acids.

B. Description of the Prior Art Nucleic acids are widely used in the medical and pharmaceutical sciences for the diagnosis and treatment of disease and as research reagents. In the diagnostic field, the nucleic acids are often used as primers for polymerase chain reaction (PCR) amplification of pathogenic nucleic acids in order to detect the presence of diseases. Nucleic acids also are used for gene therapy and as antisense molecules for inhibiting the expression of undesirable gene products. In order to use nucleic acids in the methods described above, it is often necessary to physically separate the nucleic acids from other cellular components. In the pharmaceutical field, the nucleic acids are used as drugs that can be administered to patients to fight disease. In a typical drug therapy system, nucleic acids are introduced to the patient in a polar solution, such as water.

In order for the nucleic acids to be useful as drugs, the nucleic acids must be stable in the complex environment of the patient's body and must be able to pass through the cell membrane without being degraded. Nucleic acid in polar solutions, however, is known to be unstable, particularly when exposed to the environment and cellular proteins found in the blood. Certain compounds used in the pharmaceutical arts have been described as including nucleic acid-like structures or compositions. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,091,310, to Lacroix et al. discloses antiviral nucleoside polycyclic derivatives, while U.S. Pat. No. 5,519,182, to Fuerst et al. discloses disubstituted nucleoside analogues having a bicyclic sugar moiety and a variety of purine and pyrimidine bases linked to the sugar through an aromatic or aliphatic spacer. U.S. Pat. No. 5,011,912, to Lirum et al. discloses nucleosides in which the nucleobases
