Longitudinal assessment of left ventricular structure and function in patients with type I diabetes. The independent associations of the degree of left ventricular hypertrophy with respect to body mass, hypertension, and duration of diabetes, and the prevalence of left ventricular dysfunction were determined in 159 patients with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus followed up for an average of 14 months (range 1-18 months) and matched closely with respect to age and duration of diabetes to 57 patients with long-standing idiopathic hypertrophy. In addition, left ventricular function and structure were assessed by cardiac catheterization and echocardiography before entry, at 6 months, and 2 1/2 years later. Significant differences between the two groups were found in the following respects: (1) blood pressures were lower in the diabetic group (systolic 135 +/- 18.9 versus 157 +/- 23.6 mm Hg, P less than .05, diastolic 69.4 +/- 7.8 versus 81.8 +/- 9.7 mm Hg, P less than .001), whereas the hypertrophy index was higher (3.13 +/- .76 versus 2.01 +/- .35 cm²/m², P less than .001); (2) history of retinopathy was more common in the diabetic group (41.9% versus 19.3%, P less than .05); (3) microalbuminuria was detected more frequently in the diabetic group (8.8% versus 0%, P less than .05); (4) left ventricular mass was higher in the diabetic group (258 +/- 88 versus 130 +/- 35 g/m², P less than .001) and concentric hypertrophy was more common (11.9% versus 0%, P less than .001); (5) no significant differences were found with respect to age, duration of diabetes, degree of glycemia, hemoglobin A1c level
