Deletions in chromosome 5p have been described in myelodysplastic syndrome (MDS). Loss of heterozygosity (LOH) of specific chromosomal regions may have been of diagnostic value in MDS. However, only a few cases of LOH analysis in MDS have been reported. We analyzed 50 primary MDS patients using DNA polymorphisms as LOH markers to identify chromosomal regions frequently lost in MDS. Forty-four polymorphic markers were used for an analysis of chromosome 5p. Fifteen of the primary MDS cases showed LOH in various chromosomal regions, suggesting that various regions of the chromosome were lost at the initial stage of MDS. No change in chromosome 5 LOH was observed in the 10 cases that progressed to acute leukemia. We selected one of the informative cases, MDS-01, for further analysis. Using an additional 29 polymorphic markers, we identified a region of loss of heterozygosity at 1cdb3666d
