What's new in Thanksgiving Day Griddlers:

My friends from Great Strides Families, Jay, Tyler and Piper, along with my sister and brother-in-law, invited me to their apartment where their kids’, Iris, Skylar and Charlie, were gathered with their families. Spending the holiday with all my friends (who are my mom’s age), laughing and having a really nice time, together with my nephews and nieces and their families was a great way to kick off the holiday season. My nephews and nieces all had the day off school and the kids made the most out of it spending time together. They had turkey for lunch (which I brought along with my best cranberry sauce), baked potatoes and other appetizers, a football game, then we watched the Macy’s Day parade (huge bedtime treat!) and at the end of the night we played games... okay, actually not that many games. Even though this is the time of year when family bonds are meant to get stronger (you know what? I guess it doesn’t hurt that we are practically the only family in the world). In between the games and the delicious dessert (what IS this? how did Charlie get away with eating this? Sugar’s a no-no when he’s not home.), there was a few shared experiences shared by all these children. See, although we’re not raising children, and there are six of us, we still enjoy spending time together. It’s the little things. We all took a field trip to meet Santa when they were little and it brings back some great memories for all of us. We’re also parents of children in a nearby school and we enjoyed reconnecting with our sweet neighbor kids there. Not to mention, we all got to enjoy the “best day ever” the other day at the pumpkin patch, while enjoying free beverages. And did I also mention that my brother-in-law forgot his glasses that morning and another brother-in-law is having laser eye surgery in a couple of weeks? (I know, I know!) Also, peeking my head in the door to find a bunch of kids sitting on the coffee table watching cartoons, and nieces and nephews getting snacks and drinks is quite a treat. I can’t remember the last time, or maybe the first time, I’ve been home during the day to find my nieces and nephew
