Mast cells (MC) accumulation was studied in the fundic mucosa of patients with chronic gastritis and duodenitis (CGD). They were studied with the application of the avidin-biotin immunohistochemical method. MC counts in the examined mucosa correlated positively with histological activity and inflammation intensity in erosive ulcerative fundic diseases. An elevated number of MC in patients with multiple ulcers in the fundus of the stomach was explained by the destructive activity of microbial agents. The increased MC counts in patients with duodenitis and chronic gastritis were related to a background of a long-term inflammation. MC accumulated in the mucous layer of the gastric mucosa in all the disease groups, though the pattern of MC distribution was diverse.Q: Providing content script that can detect all links in page I have a content script that injects a XHR of the contents of the currently visited page.
