5/11/2014Â 02:18:59 Install xf adsk2014 x64 latest versionThe overall objective of this project is to characterize the biochemistry and biology of oxidants and antioxidants with respect to their roles in the genesis of atherosclerosis. We intend to extend our recent studies on the role of the free radical theory of aging and atherosclerosis. In particular, we would like to: 1) investigate the free radicals formed by glucose oxidase by using spin trapping agents and measure the yield of spin adducts. 2) investigate the interaction of the free radicals formed by glucose oxidase with other enzymatic systems, the nature of the interactions with these systems, and the consequences of such interactions. 3) characterize the antioxidant defense systems, the type of free radicals formed within these systems, the localization of the free radicals and the molecules involved in the antioxidant systems. 4) correlate the capacity of plasma and cell membranes to scavenge reactive oxygen species with a) the lipid composition of the membranes and b) the activation of an enzymatic antioxidant system in the cells. 5) characterize the response of endothelial cells from different vascular beds to various oxidants, and correlate this response with the lipid composition of the cell membranes and the susceptibility of the cells to oxidative injury. 6) investigate in different vascular beds the magnitude of the capillary barrier dysfunction induced by oxidants and the molecular mechanism responsible for this phenomenon. 7) elucidate the ability of oxidized LDL to induce LDL receptor degradation. In addition to these objectives, we will investigate the effects of physiological modulators (activators, inhibitors and regulators) of the oxidant stress on the actions of the antioxidant systems. Using human serum albumin as a model, we will investigate the nature of the conformational changes induced in serum albumin by oxidants and antioxidants and determine the affinities of these agents for serum albumin.Q: dynamic memory allocation in C I was trying to create a dynamic array using malloc() (using "n" as the size of the array) but i always get an error. here's the code: #include #include int main(){ int *data,n; scanf("%d",&n); data=malloc(n*sizeof(int)); for(int i=0;i
