We investigated the possible causes of femoral dislocations after total hip arthroplasty (THA) by reviewing 50 hips (44 patients) with preoperative dislocation of the THA, and by analyzing the cup type, the head shape, and the femoral component position. It was found that use of a too small femoral component may be a main factor in development of femoral dislocations after THA. Moreover, if a biaxial cup is chosen, it should be advised that the small diameter should be introduced in the medial femoral condyle so as not to cause impingement on the intertrochanteric region of the femur.1

introducing the non-binding resolution to "nullify" the agreement and leave the U.S. out of it. But on Thursday, three Democratic presidential candidates came out strongly in favor of keeping America in the agreement. "We know that climate change is real and we know that we need to take action to fight climate change. And that's why I believe that we should join the Paris Agreement," Julián Castro said in an interview on MSNBC. "We should be doing everything we can to limit our emissions, and becoming a global leader on this issue will be critical to being able to curb our impact on global warming." But other candidates stopped well short of endorsing the agreement. Cory Booker and Michael Bennet said they are "cautiously optimistic." And John Delaney — the only remaining candidate who took part in an interview on MSNBC — said he supports keeping the agreement, and he has made climate change a key priority throughout the primary race. Former Vice President Joe Biden similarly has a complicated view of the climate agreement, according to The Washington Post. As he walked around a museum in New York, Biden told reporters that he is "not going to criticize" the Paris agreement, but he added that it is "not enough." That position is in keeping with Biden's general philosophy. "He's not a man of real detail," Deidre Smith, a Biden adviser who is also a former adviser to President Obama, said, according to The Washington Post. There's also still no word from Bernie Sanders, who has not been interviewed by the cable news networks
