Don't install hacked, cracked or pirated software. First, because doing so opens you up to a variety of problems, but also, because it exposes you to harmful and unfriendly computer viruses. It is also, definitely, not recommended that you do anything illegal. You're essentially hacking your own copy of Windows. A: These are not cracks, not modifications, and there is nothing illegal in this, as long as you're ok with the risks (eg. you're ok with installing a virus). I've done this in the past in a similar situation, but it was a piece of software that I had purchased, installed legally, and then it got accidentally deleted (I had a very important CAD design I had written, so I needed the program). What I did was to use Windows Password Reset to get a new product key and "unregister" the program for use again. Q: Is it possible to have a "status" column in a DataGridView that's tied to a property of an object? I'm currently binding a DataTable to a DataGridView control, and one of the columns is bound to a property of the row object in the datatable. Is it possible to have a "status" column that's tied to this property in the datatable? Something like this: This is currently how I'm binding the datatable, but I'd like the status column to be bound to the MyProperty property that's on the row.

You need to parse this file and search for "Product:ADT_2007_SceneEditor". MaKey MaKey (pic above), of course, is a little robot that lets you program and send simple commands to such familiar objects as your computer, lamps, light switches, and more. Much as if you were sending messages to a figurehead on the front lawn of a large home. Unfortunately, MaKey MaKey has been slow to arrive and expensive. A $100 price tag and a four-month wait. Still, we hope you understand the appeal of these things. For example, the unboxing is fantastic. Perhaps MaKey MaKey will be well worth the wait when it arrives. Or perhaps not. We look forward to reviewing the product in the coming months, and we'll keep you updated.Growing The Food Revolution Following on from the talks delivered at Trowbridge's Church of St Mary Magdalene on 30th September, The Food Revolution will take place on Sunday 15th October.
