Four freshmen men were accused of raping a freshman woman in her dorm room on Sept. 18. The four men are accused of sexually assaulting the victim in a 15-minute span, according to the Boston Globe. The unnamed woman was drinking with her friends and met the men at a party on campus. The four men are said to have taken her to her dorm room where they raped her, according to the Boston Globe. A group of about 40 students marched in support of the victim, the Boston Globe reported. Many students said they are tired of student life and school being shoved down their throats and not paying attention to their lives. College sophomore Ben Crevier said he marched because he thinks it is right that students should be protected on campus. "Harvard is an important institution, it's also a place where children go to seek their educations and should be protected like a child would be protected," Crevier told ABC News. "It's not right that an adult should be harmed in any way, especially on campus where there are supposed to be safety nets and if not they should be there." Another student said the problem was "more disconcerting." "There should be some accountability for the school," said junior Lauren Rose. " 6d1f23a050
