[The application of nanotechnology in gastrointestinal diseases therapy]. The advancement of nanotechnology has made breakthroughs in many fields of life science, including medicine. On the one hand, it has increased the function of the traditional medicine, such as improving the bioavailability of medicines; on the other hand, it has achieved the controlled drug delivery and targeted drug delivery. With the key participation of nanotechnology, the diagnosis, treatment and prevention of gastrointestinal diseases in the future will be expected to play a significant role in the advance of the medicine. However, there are few reviews on nanotechnology application in gastrointestinal diseases therapy. This review summarizes the recent research progress on the application of nanotechnology in gastrointestinal diseases therapy in order to explore the potential applications and the development status of nanotechnology in the future. Cir. 1967), and Jeffus v. Chicago Transit Authority, 5 Ill.2d 84, 122 N.E.2d 805 (1954), the courts have held that the language of the Wicks Act, the only Illinois statute specifically regulating transit company liability to passengers, was a narrow expression of the legislature's intent to achieve only those results that would be accomplished by products liability or negligent undertaking principles. In fact, when Jeffus was decided, the identical provision of the present statute was in the Illinois Pattern Jury Instructions. (See IPI 13.09.) We have found nothing that suggests an intention to broaden the scope of the statute to cover not only injuries suffered while riding inside a vehicle or conveyance, but also injuries resulting from transit accidents. Relying on Boeing v. Shipman (5th Cir. 1969), 411 F.2d 365, and Caruth v. Mariani (7th Cir. 1965), 363 F.2d 190, the plaintiffs contend that the trial court properly submitted the matter of comparative negligence to the jury, even though a transit company may be held strictly liable for its negligence. If we accepted this position, we would ignore the Wicks Act and its progenitor, which impose liability on a transit company for its negligence without fault being considered. It follows, therefore, that we may not accept the plaintiffs' argument as legally correct. ¶ 5, 6 Nevertheless, it is the better *418 policy to allow the trier of fact to consider the relative fault of the parties in an
