Category:Gameloft games Category:Windows gamesQ: BigQuery BIGINT precision Working on a project I need to import data into BigQuery from a table in Redshift. I was wondering is it possible to convert the import from Redshift to BigQuery, so the number types will be identical, and the data will keep the same precision. A: Redshift has its own precision, you don't get any automatic conversions. It's just int64 and double. You can import your data into BigQuery using the same column types. BigQuery will preserve the precision of numeric types. A comparison of the toxicity of low doses of cyclophosphamide and cisplatin in myeloid leukemia cells. Treatment of human myeloid leukemia in vitro with cyclophosphamide and cisplatin produced a time and dose-related toxicity. In the concentrations and time ranges tested, the toxicity of these drugs was comparable and the two drugs were equally toxic. A study of the mode of cell death, using DNA analysis by flow cytometry, showed that the majority of cells died in a non-apoptotic manner, and the reduced toxicity of these agents could be explained by the fact that they act via different pathways. #ifndef BOOST_MPL 6d1f23a050
